

The suggestion section would need to go underneath the area of the page where the user selects a pattern to download. There would need to be a header that states “Other users liked these patterns”. Under that header would be multiple mini pictures of suggested patterns. The suggested patterns would be generated from the results that popped up when the user searched their original search. So, the next three items in the list of search results would be generated as suggestions. That way, there would only have to be a temporary database created from the search results generated by the user and less space would be taken up.
